The long haul pays off

European transport policy has been pre-occupied with obviously strategic issues such as international networks and standards. But EUROCITIES has been working hard to demonstrate the relevance of urban transport systems to the European agenda.

Europe's strategic challenges – recovery, climate, energy and inclusion – will be won or lost in cities, and how we move around in, to and from cities is a key factor. Cities will only lead Europe out of recession if our transport systems are efficient at moving people and goods. Europe will only meet carbon targets with greener transport systems. Mobility is also vital to social and economic inclusion.

Furthermore no amount of investment in trans-European networks will reap the return it deserves unless those strategic connections link smoothly and effectively to the ultimate origin and destination for the majority of people and products: namely, cities.

Getting this far has been a long term effort. In January 2007 we provided input to the Commission's thinking ahead of its green paper on urban mobility. We consulted our members, held technical events and brought mayors face to face with the then Transport Commissioner, Jacques Barrot. Throughout 2008 we worked with the Parliament, Commission officials, national governments and stakeholders to build an alliance in support of an urban dimension for EU transport policy. The Commission undertook to publish an Action Plan, which we expect finally to emerge in late September.

This Action Plan on Urban Mobility will be a significant step forward, providing the basis for a greater emphasis in EU policies and funding programmes on supporting investment and innovation in cities' transport systems. The push is by no means over, but thanks to nearly three years of work, serious tangible benefits are within reach.

HIGHLIGHTS

Integrated Local Development for people and place

In light of the ongoing debate on the future of the EU Budget, and within that the future of the Structural Funds, EUROCITIES is developing recommendations for an EU instrument on integrated local development. As part of this work, we're inviting our members to join us for a seminar at EUROCITIES' Brussels office on 3 November.

European Mobility Week 2009 kicks off!

Hundreds of cities across Europe are this week organising a series of events aimed at encouraging people to rethink their choice of transport. The activities form part of the eighth edition of the European Mobility Week, a Europe-wide campaign held on 16-22 September each year to promote long-term sustainable urban mobility and enhance the health and quality of life of European citizens.

Mobility in cities is a key challenge for Europe

Improving mobility within, to and from our cities is of major importance both for Europe's competitiveness and for Europeans' quality of life. This point was central to the comments made by EUROCITIES' keynote speakers at the Green Streets conference held at the Committee of Regions in Brussels on 7-8 September.

Reaching out to new MEPs

The European Parliament resumed its work as of the beginning of September. EUROCITIES has already approached most Members of the European Parliament (MEPs) with an invitation for closer cooperation with European major cities during the Parliament's coming five-year term.

Following the June EP elections, only around half the previous MEPs returned to Brussels. EUROCITIES decided to launch a manifesto (shown here) to introduce itself to new MEPs, as well as reconnect with the returning ones. This is also an opportunity to spell out EUROCITIES' priorities for the coming years and invite MEPs to work on those issues alongside European cities.

Among these key issues are:

- the future EU budget;
- cohesion policy;

as well as the delivery on the EU's main strategies including:

- economic recovery;
- high-quality public services; and
- climate change.

Now that the European Parliament is in full swing, EUROCITIES will be following all relevant committees, and in particular the EP Committee for Regional Development, which is now chaired by Danuta Hübner, until recently the European Commissioner for Regional Development.

EUROCITIES would welcome the re-establishment of an Intergroup on urban issues, an initiative currently being driven by MEP Jan Olbrycht and which counts on the support of several MEPs, including Ms Hübner ■

European Mobility Week 2009 kicks off!

This week, the 8th edition of the European Mobility Week (EMW) kicks off in hundreds of towns and cities across Europe.

Taking place every year on 16-22 September, the EMW aims to promote long-term sustainable urban mobility and enhance the health and quality of life of European citizens. The 2009 theme, 'Improving City Climates', highlights the key role that local authorities can play in tackling climate change at local level, particularly by fostering a radical behavioural change among citizens by encouraging a move from unsustainable private car use towards more sustainable transport modes such as cycling and walking.

Around 1,500 local authorities participated in the campaign this year by offering their citizens a variety of innovative activities and launching permanent transport measures aimed at promoting sustainable urban transport. EMW 2009 promises to contribute significantly towards making sustainable mobility a reality in European cities.

Strengthening EUROCIITIES' role in the European Platform on Mobility Management

As part of EPOMM-PLUS - a new project on mobility management, EUROCIITIES will act as the lead partner providing input and expertise on relevant EU policy and legislation and coordinating a comparative analysis of mobility management policies across the 27 EU Member States.

EPOMM-PLUS is closely linked to the European Platform on Mobility Management (EPOMM), the international partnership which promotes and supports information exchanges on mobility management across Europe. EPOMM-PLUS specifically seeks to support the development of mobility management in European countries, to exchange and transfer good practices and to integrate mobility management into wider policies and initiatives.

EUROCIITIES' main tasks in EPOMM-PLUS will be to:

- provide the project partners with an overview of mobility management in each of the EU 27 countries;
- propose 'Transfer Roadmaps' for a better and efficient one-to-one exchange between partner countries; and
- organise advocacy work aimed at promoting mobility management towards the European institutions.

EPOMM-PLUS involves in total 22 partners from 20 countries. The current EPOMM members Austria, France, the Land of Hessen/Germany, the Netherlands, Portugal, Spain, Sweden and the UK hope to expand membership to new countries by establishing EPOMM as the authority and primary mobility management networking instrument in Europe.

Over the next three years the partners will meet regularly to exchange and network at regular events organised such as the EMMNET meeting, the first of which took place in Krakow, Poland, on 15-16 September 2009; many of these events will also be open to interested EUROCIITIES members who will have the opportunity to join various training and exchange events in their own countries ■

Integrated Local Development: towards an EU programme for people and place

In light of the ongoing debate on the future of the EU Budget, and within that the future of the Structural Funds, EUROCIITIES is developing recommendations for an EU instrument on integrated local development. As part of this work, we're inviting our members to join us for a seminar at EUROCIITIES' Brussels office on 3 November.

Our guiding principle is 'a policy for people and place': integrated local development, which we believe, is the most effective and efficient way to address Europe's strategic challenges, such as climate change, demographic change and the economic downturn.

With your input, this seminar will look at possible preconditions, tools and funding frameworks that would support such a process. Invited speakers will present arrangements and programmes that promote physical and environmental improvement as well as coordinated social and economic development.

The seminar is another step in a comprehensive consultation process which we've carried out to develop various options with a view to establishing what an appropriate instrument to support integrated local development could look like. At the seminar these ideas will be presented and discussed with key players in the current debate so that we can further refine our position and feed into upcoming policy development processes.

The event is financially supported by the European Commission, Directorate-General for Employment and Social Affairs. Travel and accommodation costs will be covered for a limited number of participants.

Culture

Culture as a catalyst for economic and social innovation for cities

A large-scale study carried out for the European Commission on 'The impacts of culture on creativity' reveals the contribution of creativity that stems from art and cultural production activities (collectively referred to as 'culture-based creativity') to innovation.

Using concrete examples from different sectors and parts of Europe, the study illustrates synergies and positive spill-over effects produced by culture through the creativity it generates in a range of areas including in the modernisation of public services and city branding.

The study calls for a European creativity policy that would, among others things, encourage imagination and talents at schools, in life, in firms and institutions, support the development of a creative economy, promote social innovation through culture and brand Europe as the place to create in the world. It also proposes to establish a 'creativity index' that would assess the creative environment in the EU and therefore enable the development of a creative ecology through art and culture.

The study suggests that European programmes and funds should increase support to creative entrepreneurs, enterprises and research centres, territories using culture as a tool for development, social innovation through culture and cultural cooperation across territories. ■

Culture in local and regional development: evidence from European Structural Funds

The European Commission has launched a study on the contribution of culture to local and regional development as part of European cohesion policy. The importance of the study lies in its potential to impact the next programming period for the Structural Funds.

If your city is or has been involved in cultural projects supported by the European Structural Funds you can participate in the study by:

- Taking part in a seminar in Brussels this coming November which is being held to examine evidence from projects funded during the years 2000–06 and in the current programming period. The seminar will analyse the nature and extent of impacts, identify trends and highlight good practice and innovative approaches.
- Provide information on projects you think should be highlighted, either because of their success, their innovative approach or their application to particular circumstances.

Swedish EU Presidency: addressing employment in a difficult climate

According to Swedish Prime Minister Fredrik Reinfeldt, the EU needs to pursue an ambitious policy to address climate change. These views were shared with political leaders, business and trade union representatives attending the conference on climate and jobs held by the Swedish Presidency of the EU on 9 September in Brussels.

Opening the event, Mr Reinfeldt highlighted the difficult context in which the current EU Presidency of the EU has to act - taking into account the worst financial and economic crisis we've faced since the 1930s which has turned into an employment crisis, plus new reports about climate change.

The Swedish Presidency has prioritised the need to respond to the economic and employment crisis, and to have a new international climate agreement in place in Copenhagen in December 2009.

Mr Reinfeldt also pointed to opportunities the crisis presents for businesses which can benefit from moving towards a more energy-efficient and low-carbon economy. Addressing the economic downturn and climate change can lead to sustainable development, Mr Reinfeldt noted.

He further explained that 'green jobs' require more financial support in the short-term through investments in innovative technologies, for example offshore wind, solar thermal electricity and second-generation biofuels. However, these new jobs will help maintain the EU's current competitive position in the global market and increase employment and GDP in the mid-term.

Together with EUROCIITIES' Environment Forum, the Economic Development Forum is keen to review the potential of green jobs and how cities can support the development of these jobs in 2010 ■

Beyond GDP to measure development

The European Commission is exploring ways to focus more on the quality rather than quantity of economic growth so as to more effectively measure economic disparities and give more weight to the social and environmental aspects of wellbeing.

On 20 August 2009, the Commission published a communication, 'GDP and beyond: Measuring progress in a changing world', which outlines an EU roadmap with the following five key actions to be undertaken now and in the mid-term:

- Complementing GDP with environmental and social indicators
- Near real-time information for decision-making
- More accurate reporting on distribution and inequalities
- Developing a European Sustainable Development Scoreboard
- Extending National Accounts to environmental and social issues

This Communication was presented and discussed with key stakeholders at a lunch event on 8 September in Brussels.

EUROCITIES' contribution to the revision of the Action Plan for Energy Efficiency

EUROCITIES has welcomed the recent consultation on the evaluation and revision on the 2006 Action Plan for Energy Efficiency (APEE), which is due out at the end of 2009.

With the imminent revisions of both the Sustainable Development Strategy and the post-2010 Lisbon Strategy, this consultation comes at a time where much may be achieved on matters of the environment and the economy. It is also timely taking into account the effects of the financial crisis and economic restructuring which have hit cities hard, as well as the EU's 20-20-20 targets and the Climate Roadmap at the end of 2009.

The plan comprises six priority areas: energy performance; energy transformation; transport; financing and pricing; energy behaviour; and international partnerships. Responding to the consultation, EUROCITIES highlighted areas where more should be done to help cities address these issues. In addition, we noted also the limited recognition given to Small and Medium-sized Enterprises and businesses as well as Information and Communication Technology which are areas that have a big impact on energy efficiency at city level ■

Sustainable Energy Action Plan template now available

The European Commission Joint Research Centre together with the Covenant of Mayors Office have jointly developed a template to help cities develop and implement their Sustainable Energy Action Plan (SEAP). In particular, the template helps to structure cities' actions and measures, and to follow up on implementation plans.

The template is available online with accompanying instructions on how to complete the form. From September onwards the template will work as an internet based tool, and cities can fill in the template directly online.

The template is a valuable tool for also collecting key information from Action Plans that can be used to promote exchange of experience. The highlights of these Actions Plans will be published on the Covenant of Mayors website.

The Waste Exchange

An innovative collaboration between EUROCITIES' Working Group (WG) on Clean Cities and our Working Group on Waste has resulted in comprehensive piece of research into waste collection operations throughout Europe.

The groups examined together a range of waste issues, including bin types, collection methods and communications strategies. Over 40 cities from 17 European countries took part in the research.

Results of the groups' work have been published with several illustrative case studies.

The initiative was undertaken with the aim of promoting a good quality of life for people living in cities, by sharing knowledge and developing expertise within the EUROCITIES network.

Transition management for sustainable urban development

Rotterdam | 4-6 October 2009

The next EUROCITIES Environment Forum in Rotterdam on 4-6 October 2009 will look at 'Cities' transformation and transition management for a more sustainable urban development'. In parallel, politicians are invited to gather in Rotterdam to debate on the current and future challenges that cities are facing with the private sector, such as how to involve it in sustainable urban development in a permanent and more effective way. development of performance indicators for urban green areas. Members also participated in several site visits to see how Sheffield City Council manages its urban green areas and parks.

Knowledge Society

City support for knowledge intensive SMEs

Despite Information and Communications Technologies (ICT) being perceived as a crisis-proof growth area, general outlooks for the sector have weakened across the European economy. At the same time, many cities have put in place specific support structures for Small and Medium Sized Enterprises (SMEs). Such structures often look into very high-impact themes within the ICT domain such as new Internet and communication services, software development and creative industries.

The next EUROCITIES Knowledge Society Forum taking place in Lille, France, on 28-30 October 2009 will look into different ways and models of how cities support the creation of sustainable and competitive SMEs in their municipality, in particular within the ICT sector.

The event will identify best practice in the design and implementation of local policies as well as offer a platform for exchanging experience. Participants will review the different models of cooperation employed by city governments, research and private sector as well as examples of successful economic transition from traditional industries to new, knowledge-based economies. A discussion on the creation of a local ecosystem that supports SMEs throughout different phases of their creation will also be held.

Outcomes of the meeting discussion will also feed into work on the economic recovery that EUROCITIES' Economic Development Forum is developing. ■

European Commission consults on future Information Society strategy

The Commission has launched a public consultation on a future Information Society strategy to further the success of the i2010 strategy which will come to a close next year. Members of the EUROCITIES Knowledge Society Forum have created an informal lead group that will draft a position paper to respond to the most pressing issues for cities in this regard.

The consultation asks for input on eight areas:

- ICT for growth and jobs
- ICT for sustainable development
- ICT research and innovation
- Creating a 100% connected society and economy
- Consolidating the online single market
- Promoting access to creativity at all levels

- Strengthening EU's role in international ICT governance
- Making modern and efficient public services available and accessible to all

The consultation will be a major opportunity to provide input to a framework that will, for the next five years, form the basic reference for all initiatives and funding schemes within the areas above.

If you are interested in contributing to EUROCITIES response, please contact Jan Franke, EUROCITIES Policy Officer - Knowledge Society: jan.franke@eurocities.eu

The consultation will be open until 9 October 2009.

Europe's digital competitiveness at stake

Almost half of all Europeans use the internet every day but one third - mainly the elderly and unemployed - have never used the web. This is according to a new European Commission report on Europe's Digital Competitiveness.

The study shows that new technologies are spreading fast across the older EU Member States but deep divisions remain. From 2005 to present day, the biggest increases in regular internet use have been seen in Ireland, the Czech Republic and France while countries like Lithuania and Italy are lagging behind. With 114 million subscribers, the EU is the largest world market for fixed broadband access. Half of European households and more than 80% of European businesses have a fixed broadband connection.

But while broadband is technically available to 90% of EU households only 50% use it in practice, with mainly low-income families opting out. Low usage rates are also seen among the 65 to 74 age group, economically inactive people and people with low levels of education.

Such social disparities are strongly present in Romania, Greece, Bulgaria, Cyprus, Portugal, Slovakia, Spain, Lithuania, Slovenia and Italy. The greatest digital equality is seen in Netherlands, Sweden, Norway, Denmark, Finland and Luxembourg.

The report also puts the progress of the EU ICT strategy i2010 over the last four years in a global perspective. It is becoming apparent that, even in areas where it has global leadership, Europe is at risk of losing its competitive edge when it comes to new, innovative developments. The report calls for a new digital agenda to meet emerging challenges.

Mobility in cities is a key challenge for Europe

Improving mobility within, to and from our cities is of major importance both for Europe's competitiveness and for Europeans' quality of life. This point was central to the comments made by EUROCITIES' keynote speakers at the Green Streets conference held at the Committee of Regions in Brussels on 7-8 September.

Addressing around 200 participants at the launch of the event supported by EUROCITIES, Rudolf Schicker, Executive City Councillor for Urban Development, Traffic, and Transport at the City of Vienna commented:

"While the EU should provide cities with guidance and financial support, local administrations are best placed to implement European Commission policy measures which promote green transport. City governments should be recognised for their capacity to manage key components of the strategic transport system as well as to catalyse EU-wide sustainable mobility and growth".

Three quarters of Europe's population is urban and according to the Commission, that figure will have risen to 84% by 2050. Cities are therefore at the centre of the climate change challenge. According to EUROCITIES' Secretary General Paul Bevan, also speaking at the event:

"City governments have to strive hard to reach that greener goal, and using energy more efficiently in how we live, work and travel in cities is the key to reducing our carbon footprint".

Gilles Vesco, Vice-president of Grand Lyon - also a EUROCITIES member - chaired one of the event's sessions dealing with non-motorised transport in the modern city. Mr Vesco, who is responsible for urban mobility and use of public spaces in Lyon, has promoted the 'Velo V' project which organises a service for free bicycle use in Lyon and in other cities across the EU.

In March 2009, EUROCITIES presented the Commission with its response to the consultation on the Future of Transport and highlighted the need for a stronger urban dimension in the EU transport strategy. In the communication, the Commission has identified urbanisation as one of six issues including ageing, migration and internal mobility, environment, energy and globalisation.

Urbanisation is a defining feature of today's society and therefore requires that mobility within cities be addressed as a strategic policy issue at EU level. EUROCITIES is hopeful the expected European Commission action plan will provide for this ■

Register now for the CIVITAS Forum conference

Krakow | 19-21 October 2009

CIVITAS, the European Commission initiative aimed at promoting cleaner and better transport in cities, is getting ready for its annual event, this year taking place in Krakow on 19-21 October. EUROCITIES collaborates with the CIVITAS Initiative and the organisation of the Forum 2009 in Krakow through the support action CIVITAS VANGUARD.

The upcoming three-day conference offers an exceptional programme, ensuring plenty of opportunities for direct contact and exchange among participants.

Anne Houtman, Director for Internal Market and Sustainability at the European Commission's Directorate-General for Energy and Transport, and Jacek Majchrowski, Mayor of the City of Krakow, will open the Forum. The plenary session will be followed by a series of technical sessions and roundtables. Technical sessions will showcase the latest experiences of European cities on topics such as clean vehicles, safety and security or school travel plans. The roundtable discussions will explore and develop ideas important to the future evolution of European urban transport and of the CIVITAS Initiative.

Another milestone reached: EU Social Protection Committee listens to EUROCITIES.

Chair of EUROCITIES' Social Affairs Forum and Vice-mayor of Stockholm Ulf Kristersson, together with EUROCITIES Secretary General Paul Bevan, was invited to address the EU Social Protection Committee (SPC) on 14 September.

Since its establishment in 2000, the SPC has served as a vehicle for cooperative exchange between the European Commission and Member States on modernising and improving social protection systems.

The meeting marked a milestone for EUROCITIES in that it was the first time that this group of government officials engaged directly in dialogue with concerned stakeholders. The SPC was specifically interested in EUROCITIES' expectations for the EU Lisbon Strategy post-2010 as well as our views on how social policy is being coordinated across the EU.

Mr Kristersson and Mr Bevan pressed for clear and measurable indicators for social inclusion, and a more systematic role for cities in the preparation and follow-up of the National Action Plans on Social Inclusion developed by each Member State. They also proposed a closer link with the EU Structural Funds to support innovative pilots for social inclusion. By linking up to the SPC's priority themes, such as housing and migrant integration, this would enhance the visibility of the EU's social dimension ■

How sound are cities' social and health services?

Warsaw | 8-9 October 2009

At its upcoming Autumn meeting in Warsaw, EUROCITIES' Social Affairs Forum will review the relations between public administrations and their social and health service providers.

Workshops will centre around the commission of services, quality control and management of partnerships and relations in the social and health service field. This meeting comes at a time when many cities are confronted with the need to deliver high quality services with shrinking budgets.

Professor Daniel Hiebert of Malmo University, Sweden, will give the keynote speech and will present the role of civil society organisations in delivering services in British Columbia, Canada. Other key issues to be addressed include healthcare and tackling health inequalities.

EUROCITIES Working Group meetings coming up!

Cities in need of migration: EUROCITIES' input to the Stockholm Programme

In its analysis of the European framework on immigration, asylum and integration, EUROCITIES has highlighted prevailing obstacles which are preventing cities from realising their full potential in promoting integration and making migration work well.

Reacting to the 'Stockholm Programme', the framework being developed, our report illustrates current practices and provides recommendations on how to bolster the crucial role of local authorities in migration and integration. Before it's adopted at the end of this year, EUROCITIES recommends that the Stockholm Programme should:

- Recognise the central role of local authorities, together with a partnership that corresponds to this role;

- Reduce the implementation gap between European policy making and local implementation;
- Move the governance of migrant integration in Europe beyond current institutional divides;
- Reach out beyond the group of third country nationals;
- Ensure the European political debate recognises the benefits of migration; and
- Encourage EU Member States to strengthen the rights of third country nationals.

Commission takes stock of progress on sustainable development

Due to its impact at national, regional and local level, EUROCITIES is following the European Commission's progress and reporting of the EU Sustainable Development Strategy (SDS).

Adopted by the European Council in 2006, the renewed EU SDS is an overarching strategy for all EU policies which sets out how we can meet the needs of present generations without compromising the ability of future generations to meet their needs. The SDS deals in an integrated way with economic, environmental and social issues and addresses seven key challenges including:

- Climate change and clean energy
- Sustainable transport

- Sustainable consumption and production
  - Conservation and management of natural resources
  - Public health
  - Social inclusion, demography and migration
  - Global poverty

At the request of the European Council, the Commission undertook a recent review of progress achieved so far in these seven priority areas; the mainstreaming of policies in other cross-cutting EU strategies; the EU's shift towards a green growth; and other steps taken via the Lisbon Strategy.

The report shows that there is still room for improvement and supports the continuation of the strategy's long-term focus. Recommendations made include a shift to a low carbon economy; an intensification of environmental efforts; and a stronger international dimension in social inclusion.

At the end of this year, the European Council is expected to present guidelines and principles to shape such review which is due out in 2011; EUROCITIES will assess the potential means of getting involved in this review ■

Debating multilevel governance in Europe

With the objective of sharing its recommendations on the White Paper on Multilevel Governance among a wider audience, the Committee of Regions (CoR) is holding a debate on the topic on 22 September 2009 in Brussels.

The event will gather members of CoR and other representatives of local and regional authorities, as well as high level political and institutional representatives including Felipe González, academics and students.

The conference will open with a political discussion on multilevel governance with contributions from the Swedish EU Presidency, the European Commission, the European Parliament and the Wise Men (a group of government officials who, during the Truman administration, crafted institutions and initiatives such as NATO, the World Bank, and the Marshall Plan) on the future of Europe. This will be followed by a roundtable on Europe's political direction in light of the new mandates for both the European Parliament and European Commission. The event will close with a thematic workshop on the challenges of multilevel governance in the EU.

Complementing the CoR's general consultation on the White Paper launched in June 2009, this event will give local and regional authorities, associations and other stakeholders a chance to share their views on the issue of multilevel governance within the EU.

A Europe-wide review of social housing services at the local level

Various locations in Europe | September/October 2009

After a successful launch at European and national level, the EUROCITIES-Network of Local Authorities Observatories (EUROCITIES-NLAO) on Active Inclusion is now working on delivering an in-depth analysis on the implementation of active inclusion policies (particularly in social services) at the local level.

As part of this work, the project's Local Authority Observatories - Bologna, Prague, Rotterdam, Southampton and Stockholm - are researching social and supported housing for people furthest away from the labour market.

Each city will hold a 'National Review Seminar on Housing' this September. These events will bring together a wide variety of stakeholders involved in housing policy and practice to review the LAO's research findings and discuss resulting policy recommendations. Local authorities, national ministries, regional government, European stakeholders and service providers, will be among those attending.

All EUROCITIES members are welcome to participate in these events:

- Rotterdam: 15 September 2009
- Prague: 22 September 2009
- Stockholm: 28 September 2009
- Southampton: 29 September 2009
- Bologna: 1 October 2009

DIVE update: second peer review and new website launched

The City of Berlin on 13-16 July hosted the second in the series of the DIVE peer reviews. As coordinator of the DIVE project, EUROCITIES joined for the occasion together with representatives from Leeds, Rome, Barcelona and Tampere, Ethics etc. consultancy; and the Migration Policy Group.

The Berlin visit included a series of structured interviews with staff of Berlin city's administration and political leaders. Workshops were also held with external stakeholders to showcase Berlin's policy and practice aimed at promoting diversity and equality issues in the field of integration.

As is required in the peer review process, the City of Berlin carried out a self-assessment of its own progress against the DIVE benchmark on the promotion of diversity and equality management, providing peers with an initial report based on this. Berlin will receive a final feedback report from the DIVE peer review team in the coming weeks offering a more detailed breakdown of findings.

The two of the DIVE project's four city visits which have been held to date have already demonstrated the benefits of the project's peer review methodology.

Both peers and cities under review have commended the project as an effective facility for sharing knowledge on integration strategies.

A new website has now been launched to keep you up-to-date on the progress of the DIVE project and other issues on migration and integration that EUROCITIES is addressing. The website also features information about EUROCITIES' Working Group on Migration and Integration, the Integrating Cities conference series and projects in the field.
